ERIN HOWE

BA FASHION MANAGEMENT & MARKETING

Through my course, I got the chance to travel to New York Climate Week with the sustainable fashion initiative, The NAT. It was an incredible opportunity to see how fashion, business and culture can work together for a more sustainable future, and it completely changed the way I think about the industry.

During the week, we joined workshops and roundtables with creative students, designers and CEOs, all exploring ideas for a nature-positive fashion industry. What stood out most to me was how much real change depends on education and collaboration. It's not only about teaching designers and creatives, but also about helping consumers understand how to buy and care for their clothes in a more ethical way. That's something my tutors at LCCA really encourage as they push us to question what sustainability really means beyond being a buzzword.

One of the highlights of the trip for me was a panel on how technology and AI can support sustainability. There is often fear around this kind of technology, but it was really inspiring and helpful to see how brands are using innovation responsibly to create real solutions rather than more problems.

When I got back to London, I was able to bring what I'd learned into my studio projects and class discussions. It reminded me how powerful it is when creativity meets purpose, and how small individual actions can add up to make a real difference. The experience gave me exactly what I was hoping for from my course, the chance to connect classroom learning with real-world change and to see how creative thinking can drive a more ethical future for fashion.

Studying fashion at LCCA took me all the way to New York.

SUCCESS STORIES

PATRICK D'CAMPOS

FASHION MANAGEMENT AND MARKETING

Studying Fashion Management and Marketing at LCCA gave me the tools, confidence and direction to turn creative ideas into real opportunities.

During my degree, I developed my own luxury capsule brand, IAMPATRICK, a genderless 19-piece collection inspired by my grandfather who was a tailor. The brand focuses on minimalist luxury, sustainability and European craftsmanship. It was through my studies that I learned how to build every part of the business, including pricing, sourcing and manufacturing, branding and marketing strategy. Being able to present the full business plan to industry as part of My Final Major Project was one of the proudest moments of my degree.

Modules like Brand Management, Marketing Strategy and Trend Forecasting played a huge part in shaping how I think as both a creative and a strategist. My lecturers always encouraged me to merge creativity, research and business thinking, and that mindset now drives everything I do.

Alongside my studies, I gained hands-on experience working in luxury retail, including with the Chanel group, where I learned the importance of client experience, visual merchandising and product storytelling within a heritage Parisian accessories house. This professional exposure helped me connect everything I was learning in class to the real world of fashion.

I was able to leave LCCA with a brand and industry experience that led me to step into a professional marketing role as a Marketing Executive, where I'm responsible for creating social content. I'm also planning to continue into postgraduate study in Strategic Fashion Marketing to take my brand and career to the next level.

Looking back, my experience at LCCA gave me the confidence, knowledge, and direction I needed to build a career that connects creativity with purpose.

Studying at LCCA gave me the confidence to start my own brand.
